Langston University Rehabilitation Research and Training Center

Presents

Writing Competitive NIDRR and NIH Research Grant Proposals: An Integrated Workshop

Place: Tennessee State University
Date: December 10, 2014
Time: 9 Am to 4PM
Facilitators: Allen Lewis*, PhD and Rogério M. Pinto, PhD

AGENDA

Objective: To provide hands-on experience in writing federal grant proposals and inspire researchers to develop and apply for NIDRR and NIH grants

1) Morning (9:00AM to 12 noon): Basics of grant writing with an inspirational component.

2) Break between 10:15AM and 11AM

3) 11AM to 12:15noon: From specific aims to limitations: Key points for successful grantsmanship.

4) 12:15noon to 1:30PM: Lunch on your own

5) 1:30PM to 4PM: Consultations. For those who are already writing grants. Anyone who is interested in getting more one-on-one help, please come to this session. This is an open house where people drop in to ask questions and leave as they please.

Allen Lewis, PhD: Department Head of Health Sciences at James Madison University in Harrisonburg, VA. His research has been funded by the National Institute of Disability and Rehabilitation Research. His research focuses on disability disparities as well as measuring the effectiveness of disability services.

Rogério M. Pinto, PhD: Associate Professor at Columbia University School of Social Work. His research, funded mostly by the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH), focuses on the impact of inter-agency and trans-disciplinary collaboration on the delivery of HIV evidence-based services in the U.S., Brazil and Spain. NIMH is one of many institutes under the umbrella of the National Institutes of Health.

Acknowledgement: This grant-writing workshop is sponsored by the Langston University Rehabilitation Research and Training Center (LU-RRTC) on Research and Capacity Building for Minority Entities. Requests for technical assistance in developing a NIDRR or NIH grant proposal should be directed to Dr. Corey L. Moore (Principal Investigator) at capacitybuildingrrtc@langston.edu.

CLICK HERE TO RSVP