The Management Concentration (30 hours) is designed to prepare students for a career in the management field. Graduates of the program will possess the basic, technical, theoretical and application skills required for managers in industry, government, and nonprofit organizations.

What is Management?
- Four primary activities: planning, organizing, leading and controlling.
- Manager devises strategies that enable their companies to win in the marketplace.
- Managers select and train employees to implement their plans.
- Managers motivate and lead their employees by using a variety of analytical techniques; a manager evaluates the success of his or her strategies.

What are the career options for managers?
A career in management offers students the flexibility to work in a variety of settings. Managers often work in a number of positions during their careers.

- Functional managers are in charge of a functional area within the organization. Some of the functional areas are marketing, human resources, and finance.
- Project managers are in charge of a specific project. They may oversee the development of a new product or service. Once a project is completed, they move to the next challenge.
- Product managers often are responsible for motivating and managing sales teams while developing forecasts and evaluating customer needs.
- General Managers are responsible for business operations. They are in charge of a wide range of activities.
- Executives are senior managers that determine what the firm’s strategy will be and are responsible for all aspects of the company.

Job Availability
Managers will find opportunities in a wide range of industries. The Department of Labor states that “because top managers are essential to the success of any organization, their jobs are unlikely to be automated or off shored to other countries.” There are more than two million general, operations and top level management position in the US. While salaries vary widely, top managers are some of the highest paid workers in the US.
