In the Communication Studies major with a concentration in Intercultural Communication, students will gain extensive knowledge in the relationship between rhetoric, communication, and culture. Our core and elect courses will help students understand how communication processes differ from culture to culture and impact personal and social lives. As a student majoring in this concentration, you will gain Intercultural Communication competence and critical perspectives on local/global issues, and become more critical of your own cultural identity as it influences the way individuals communicate with people of different cultural and ethnic backgrounds.
