TSU's College of Agriculture's Leadership Fellows program seeks to help students who actively participate in student chapters of professional agricultural, family or human science organizations — organizations such as:

- FFA
- 4-H Youth Development
- the Junior Chapter of the National Society for Minorities in Agriculture, Natural Resources and Related Sciences (MANRRS)
- or Women in Agriculture.

Leadership Fellows offers a unique STEM internship program that assists students with college expenses. This competitive program selects students who have demonstrated outstanding leadership skills in their extracurricular organization(s).

Experiential activities

- Weekly research experience
- Weekly reading, journaling, and reflection upon leadership applications gleaned from the internship, workshops, and seminars
- Participation in monthly agricultural education seminars
- Bi-annual participation in leadership development associations and conferences
- Annual leadership development travel and service learning experiences

General Eligibility

- Be an active member of a student chapter of a professional organization related to agricultural, family and human sciences
- Be admitted to Tennessee State University
- Seek a degree in Agricultural Sciences or Family and Consumer Sciences
- Conduct undergraduate research
- Actively engage in the Leadership Development Program
