

Automated External Defibrillators (AEDs) are machines that allow certified users to deliver a shock to a person in cardiac arrest in order to stop abnormal heart rhythms and restore normal heart rhythms. Tennessee State University was among the first Tennessee Board of Regent schools to provide multiple AED units on campus and currently has 38 AEDs maintained by the Department of Environmental Health and Safety. Training in the use of AEDs and CPR is provided to faculty and staff periodically throughout the calendar year.
